How to Teach Kids Responsibility: 13 Effective Ways

Encourage Your Child to Complete Chores

The benefits of teaching your child chores are backed by science-led and anecdotal evidence. A study on the Associations Between Household Chores and Childhood Self-Competency found that children who performed chores in early elementary school developed greater self-competence, prosocial behavior, and self-efficacy by third grade. Moreover, research from La Trobe University (Australia) indicates that age-appropriate chores, including cooking and gardening, improve children's problem-solving abilities, self-regulation, and executive functioning skills.

Examples of kid-friendly chores, based on age, include:

Ages 2-3:

- Putting toys away
- Putting dirty clothes in the laundry basket
- Helping to fill up a pet's water bowl
- Wiping up spilled drinks
- Dusting low surfaces

Ages 4-5:

- Setting and clearing the kitchen table
- Folding towels
- Helping to prepare meals (under supervision!)
- Watering plants
- Helping to shop for groceries

Ages 6-11:

- Feeding pets
- Watering plants
- Folding clothes
- Taking out the trash
- Vacuuming floors
- Helping prepare meals (under supervision!)

Ages 12-18:

- Doing their own laundry
- Cleaning bathrooms
- Mowing the lawn
- Helping cook meals (or even cooking them on their own)
- Babysitting younger siblings

The best way to keep track of your child's chores is to create a chore chart – especially for younger children. This way, they can add a star sticker every time they complete something, which will give them a sense of accomplishment.
